ROBOT PILOTS AIR PLANE ON BOMBING RAID

'ROUND 'N' 'ROUND

People still believe in signs. In spite of the fact that such silliness is laughed at.

Some of the best known signs that have been handed down through the ages are:

To break a mirror means seven years' bad luck, or that you will lose your best friend.

To stumble with the right foot is good luck; with the left foot, bad luck.

A falling picture is the sign of a coming death in the home.

Spilling salt is the sign of a quarrel. To avoid it, throw a pinch over the left shoulder with the right hand.

The howling of a dog portends death and calamity.

Ear burning — if the right ear someone is speaking good of you; if the left ear, someone is speaking evil of you.

Black cats are the sign of good luck and bad luck; if a black cat crosses your path it is bad luck; if a black cat follows you, it is good luck.

Shoes must never be put on the table.

Always get out of bed the right foot first. If the left foot touches the floor first it is a sure sign of an unlucky day.

Now, there's something for you. The next time you are caught speeding, tell the officer that it wasn't your fault; you just got out of bed with the left foot first.

To wear green on Friday is a sign of good luck.

If we can find anything more unreasonable or sillier, we'll let you know about it.

NEW ERA IN AVIATION SEEN

SACRAMENTO, April 17. — (UP) — A tiny mechanism installed in a huge army bombing plane guided the ship between here and San Francisco tonight, causing it to circle over the bay several times while the two pilots sat in the plane, never touching the controls.

It was the first time that such an extended flight had been made with the "mechanical pilot" at the controls, and army officials declared it marked an era in the navigation of airplanes.

Leaving Mather field shortly before sunset, the plane was turned over to the robot pilot when it reached an elevation of 10,000 feet. The course was indicated in the complicated machinery of the automatic guider and the pilot settled back for the trip.

Bumpy Weather Arriving over Carquinez Straits where the warm air of the interior California valleys met the cold air from the sea, the first real test began as the plane hit the bumpy air always found in this region.

It responded perfectly — at 100 miles an hour, the automatic pilot adjusting for each dip and sway caused by the uneven air current. Two gyroscopes concealed in the machinery noted each deviation from the course and communicated the information to the steering mechanism by electrical control.

As the plane soared over the San Francisco waterfront, still on its course set at Mather field, one of the pilots reached forward and touched a button marked "left." The bomber swung in a long circle that carried it out over the bay and back to its starting point.

Over Golden Gate A button indicating "right" was then lightly touched and the robot pilot took the plane off on a swing over the Golden Gate. Following maneuvers over San (Continued on Page 8)

TWO DEAD IN INDIAN RIOTS

KARACHI, India, April 17. — (UP) — Civil disobedience, carried like a firebrand from coast to coast in India, blazed anew here today. Two Hindus already had lost their lives by violence.

A tremendous mob, gathered outside the jail, became a surging sea of defiance when it was announced that six illegal salt makers had been sentenced to prison terms at hard labor. Wild scenes of disorder followed, with the police finally quelling the disturbance.

The six men sentenced were all followers of Mahatma Gandhi's passive resistance movement designed to abolish British rule. Two of them, Dr. Chhotiram, president of the Sind provincial congress committee, and Narandas Amjee Bechar, president of the Karachi committee, were sentenced to two years hard labor. Swami Krishnand and Vishnu Sharma, editor of a Hindu publication, were jailed for 18 months. Manilal Vyas drew a one-year term and Dr. Trachand Lalvani six months.

The defendants were tried in the jail, because the mob yesterday stormed the courthouse and drew rifle fire from police. Seventeen police and 41 members of the throng fell in yesterday's riots, and one of the natives, Dattaram Konde, was killed. Konde was wounded at sunset, thousands gathering around his pyre and muttering against the British government.

Today 18-year old Maharaj Raghuchand, another of those wounded by police bullets, died. His body was carried through the streets of Karachi at noon, followed by a long procession of mourners.

AL DENIES BIG MERGER

CHICAGO, April 17. — (UP) — Developments in Chicago's seething gangland sectors came thick and fast tonight on the rebound of the machine gun slaying of one of the city's best known criminals.

Joe Blue, known as the "king of the pickpockets," as a bank robber, a dynamiter, and an extortionist, was murdered early today by a man who pointed a machine gun at his small auto from a large touring car and sprayed his machine with lead slugs.

Hardly had his car crashed over the curb with his body slumped at the wheel than police started terrorizing and strange reports began to seep into headquarters from underworld sources.

Police were inclined to lay the atrocity to Fred Burke, called the "most dangerous man alive" because of his reputed connection in the 1928 St. Valentine's day massacre. (Continued on Page 5)

NINE SACKS TAKEN BY ROBBERS

CHICAGO, April 17. — (UP) — An air mail truck was held up tonight by bandits at the municipal airport and nine bags of mail were stolen.

The driver of the truck, Adolph Stehno, was forced to take his machine a mile and a half from the airport before the robbers stopped and sorted the bags which they wanted.

No estimate of the loot could be given by postal officials until after a check.

Police said they believed the robbers had made a mistake and taken the wrong mail. They obtained nine sacks from the Milwaukee section of the Northwest Airways, which picked up mail at Oshkosh, Milwaukee, Janesville and Rockford.

Two of the sacks were registered and weighed eight and one-half pounds.

The St. Paul-Minneapolis plane was forced down by fog and did not come in but would have arrived about the time the Milwaukee plane did, police said. It was this plane which probably would have had more valuable mail.

The Boeing plane, bringing in mail from the coast, arrived an hour after the hour, and the eastern plane arrived an hour earlier.

TWO DAYS TO EUROPE

DR. HUGO ECKENBERG, who steered the Graf Zeppelin around the world, announces regular dirigible service between the United States and Germany by 1932. Four oversize blimps will be in the service, and the trans-Atlantic hop can be made in two days. By that time the Europa and Bremen will be plodding along in four days and twelve hours, carrying freight.

When the rush starts for transportation over the ocean in a gas bag the women and children can have our seat. We do not care to go to Europe in a Zeppelin. One puncture or a blowout would ruin the whole trip.

Many people are enthusiastic about this new mode of reaching Europe. They point out there is practically no danger. Didn't the Graf Zeppelin circumnavigate the globe? Well, yes, it did. And some fellow sailed around the world in a 31-foot catboat; too, but you can't catch up stepping into a craft like that to get to Europe.

No matter how safe a Graf Zeppelin is supposed to be, it still looks like a balloon.

These dirigibles will give the steamships a lot of competition. At that, cheap second-class travel. The Graf Zeppelin Line, New York to Berlin in two days: 133 biggest dirigibles in the world! Bump into clouds instead of fog. Take a nap every afternoon. 5,000 feet in the air. All deck chairs equipped with parachutes. Every comfort and luxury of the big ocean liners, plus speed. When you travel on a Zepp, the Atlantic Ocean is your swimming pool.

We will not cross the ocean on a gas bag yet a while. For one thing, two days is not long enough to make up the lies on your customs declaration.

It is tough enough on a six-day ship to write $10.00 worth of perfume at $6, then erase it to $4, then knock it down to $1.25, and finally decide to smuggle it in. If you board a Zeppelin in Germany and face those New York customs inspectors two days later, you will not have your declarations marked down half enough. That's an expense you've got to figure on.

There are other disadvantages in a two-day trip, too. Just a little touch of air sickness and you might miss every meal on the Zepp. On a six-day liner you can get back at them by eating five times a day as soon as you get well.

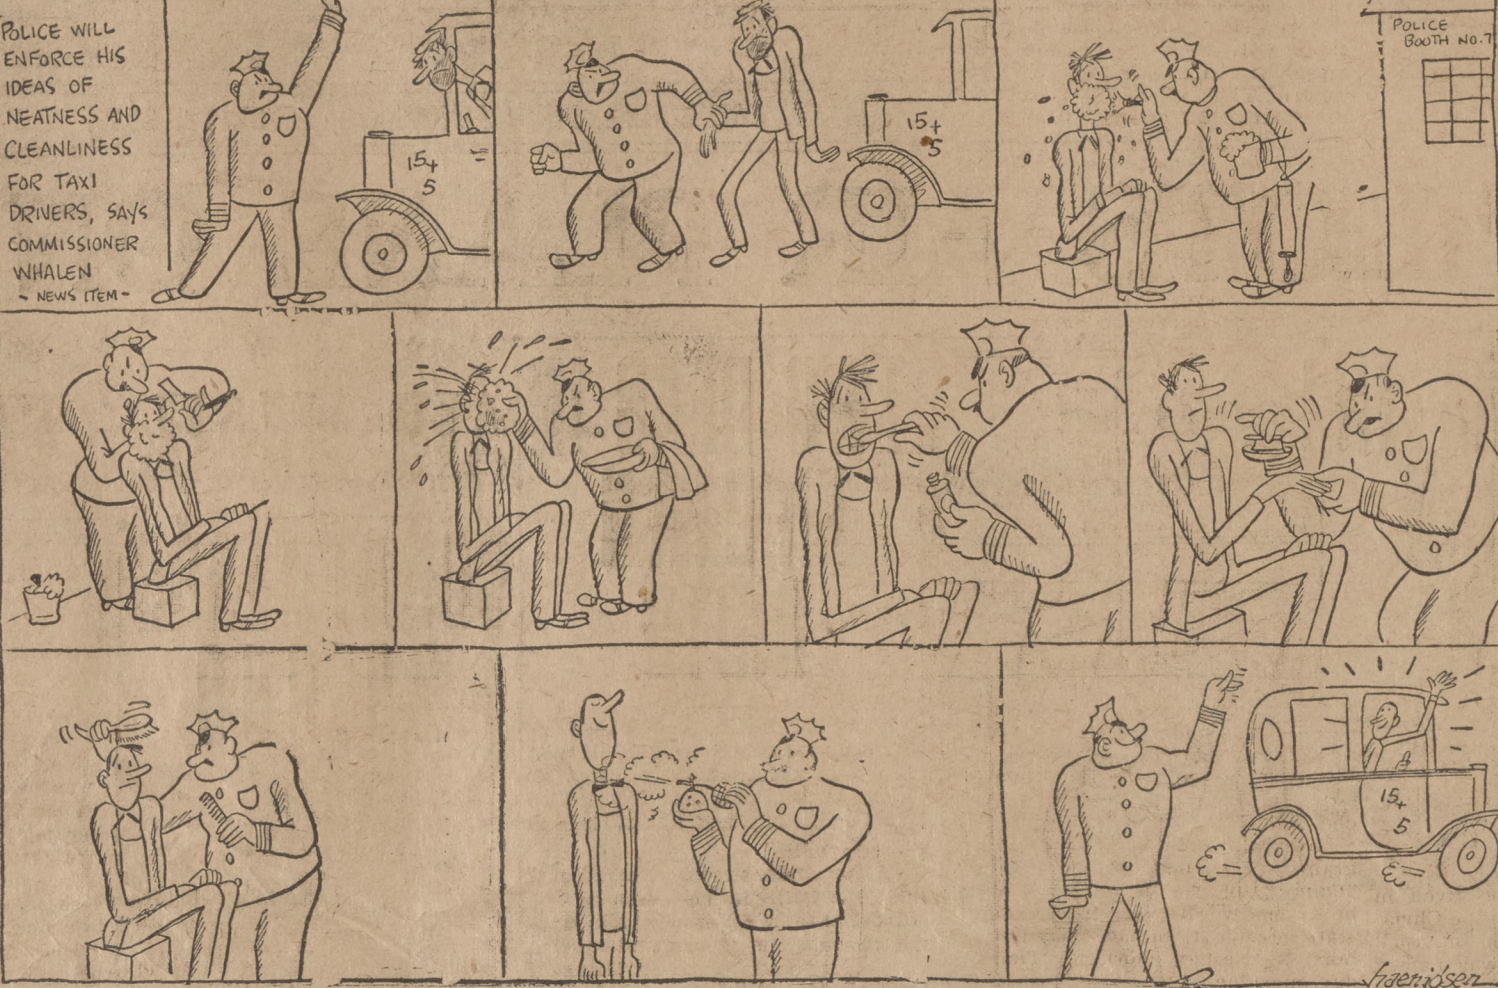

Two days is not long enough, either, to snub other persons on the blimp. Half the fun of a good old-fashioned ship journey is tilting your nose at other folks.

In addition to those drawbacks, what are you going to throw a man who falls overboard on a dirigible? The only thing the Captain can do is drop him a line, or just a postcard, and wish him luck in being picked up by a fishing smack.

No flying to Europe is not for us. It is all right for Lindbergh and other venturesome souls. But saving time is not so important to us as would travel with a bag filled with hellum gas.

It may be fine to travel as the crow flies. But when you're two miles up in the air, you are also liable to travel as the crowbar drops.

Anti-Semitism in Universities

Hardly has a comparative peace been established in one corner of the Jewish world than trouble breaks out in another quarter. This time it's the nationalist students of the University of Warsaw who have been rioting and beating their fellow students of Jewish tradition. Last year the awakening Magyars in Budapest created such a scene against the Jewish students that the university had to be closed for a certain length of time. At the Roumanian institutions of learning there is always more or less of an anti-Semitic effervescence. The result has been that more and more young Jews from these Eastern European countries have been coming to France and Belgium. Louvain and Brussels, for instance, have the largest number of foreign students inscribed in their universities that ever they had. In the case of Louvain this is truly remarkable, for its famous colleges were crowded with foreigners already in the middle ages, because of its reputation, second only to Rome, as a centre of Catholic learning, the erudition of its professors and the wealth of its library. Of course, in olden days it was perfection in theology and philosophy that the foreigners came to seek. Nowadays the medical faculty and kindred faculties are crowded. The same applies to the Sorbonne. A heavy percentage of the foreign students are Jews from Roumania. But now even in Paris, that world centre of enlightenment and tolerance, an agitation against Jewish students has been set up. Information Universitaire, official organ of the medical faculty, in its last number prints a harsh and bitter denunciation against the Jewish students. The cry has already been taken up by such nationalist papers as Liberté and Action Française. Many Roumanian Jewish students, it appears, are settling in France upon graduating. It is not difficult to see the reason. But it is arousing the indignation of the nationalists. So far the agitation is confined to the slimy game of mud-slinging. But it may well serve to make the Jewish boys and girls who are eager for knowledge, bethink themselves of the university of their own, over there on Mount Scopus.

Suicide Library

The City of Augsburg, famous in history as the place where Martin Luther drew up the confession of faith which ushered in the greatest moral revolution that Europe had known up to that time, makes a new claim upon fame, although a far more modest and significant one. Augsburg has become the possessor of a library truly unique in its kind. The library is composed of 700 works upon the subject of suicide. A journalist, Herr Hans Rost, collected the books, which he left at death to the City Council, which in turn has accepted the peculiar gift "with great satisfaction and due gratitude." The oldest essay on suicide in the collection is from the pen of Bishop Sailer and dates from 1785. Three hundred of the volumes have been banned by the censors of various countries. The "ex-libris" of the collection shows death waiting between the pillars of the famous suicide bridge at Grossheidele. In the collection is a manuscript by d'Annunzio on the eerie subject and some poems by Serge Essenin, the late Isadora Duncan's tumultuous husband. Harry Crossby's odes to suicide were the latest to be added. Both the latter ended their lives, it will be recalled. The City of Augsburg plans to keep the collection going by adding an archive for research in suicide.

Victor Hugo

A French writer who takes pleasure in digging up anecdotes about "bon mots" attributed to the great of the past, has been busy on Victor Hugo, the centenary of whose first play is commemorated this year in Paris. Victor Hugo, he says, once walked in his garden in that grandiose Olympian attitude that he affected, when Leonote de Lisle entered. "You'd never guess what I was thinking about," said Hugo. "Of what new work were you thinking, Maitre?" "No. I was thinking of what I would say to God when I shall come in His presence." "You will simply say: 'My dear colleague, that's all,' came back de Lisle. La Croix, ultra-clerical newspaper, published the following death notice on Victor Hugo on May 23, 1885: "Victor Hugo died this morning at one thirty. He was the greatest poet of the century. But he was crazy the last thirty-six years of his life. May his folly be an excuse in the eyes of God. Let us commemorate with these words to declare him immortal, and let us pray God for the peace of his soul!"

A DISH A DAY

One of the vegetables which has potentialities undreamed of by the average cook is sweet potatoes. Although they are in the market for the greater part of the year, and never at a prohibitive price, they have suffered from neglect.

Many housewives rarely offer them on their table in any form, but baked. Others consider them only as an adjunct to chicken or a la Maryland, at which time they are usually candied. These are delicious and easily prepared, but they are too sweet for many tastes. Also they are monotonous if served too often.

It was the justly famous Southern cooks who discovered that sweet potatoes could be used in place of pumpkin in pies, fluffs, puddings, and that sweet potatoes sliced and baked in a crock with marshmallows and butter dotting each layer provided a delicious accompaniment for plain broiled meats.

The possibilities for varying the mode of preparing sweet potatoes for the table do not end here, however. This is just the beginning. There are endless combinations for stuffed baked potatoes. Of all of them, these seem to me the most enticing.

STUFFED SWEET POTATOES

Wash and bake sweet potatoes until tender. This will require from twenty-five to forty-five minutes, depending on the size and age of the potatoes. Follow out the insides by cutting a layer from each one lengthwise and scooping out with a spoon, taking care not to break the skin at the bottom. Mash the potato pulp thoroughly and beat until creamy, with a teaspoon of butter and a tablespoon of milk allowed for each one. Season well and add one-half cup of cooked or canned Golden Bantam corn for each potato. Decrease the amount if potatoes are small. Stuff the potato and corn mixture back in the potato skins, heaping the surplus on top. Place in hot oven until thoroughly heated and slightly browned.

Crushed pineapple from which the liquid has been drained can be substituted for the corn. Both of these dishes are high in nourishment value and are excellent to serve with vegetable dinners. Where sweet potatoes appear on the menu, the salad should always be crisp and tart for contrast.

French Woman Sees Us as Futile Imitators of Men

"The American Woman Menace"

American Writer Sure Mme. Mercier Saw Only Surface

Mme. Sylvia Mercier, French Essayist, Says Our Women Are Hard and Have Not Advanced Under Their New Freedom

By Coralie Van Paassen

PARIS. "THE present-day type of American woman is the destroyer of the family, the greatest danger that civilization has ever known." She is unwomanly, talks and acts like a man and knows no restrictions in her emancipation, in which she aims to be as much of a man as possible. The fault for all this lies with the way in which American men treat their women. Men in America do not look upon their wives as love-mates, but as a kind of business partners. The result is that women are rapidly losing all modesty and femininity.

This ruthless indictment of our women comes from Mme. Sylvia Mercier, well-known French essayist and novelist, who has made a few trips to America to study the woman question. The opinion summarizes, in broad traits, the impressions Mme. Mercier has collected in America. She is contributing a few articles about her findings to the Parisian gazettes, as a kind of foretaste of a book of merciless criticism in which she is preparing to warn her sisters in France against what she calls "the American woman danger," which threatens to upset "the peaceful and harmonious mode of European life."

The fundamental evil in American marital relations rests upon the hypocrisy of the men of that country, asserts Mme. Mercier. They have flattered their women into the modern emancipation, which they are competent business managers, which no doubt they are, but in doing so they have given an altogether wrong tendency to women's emancipation. Woman's emancipation should not be directed to show how much alike women can be with men, but what new heights women can achieve in their own domain of femininity.

"American women have smashed what they think are the chains which bind them to the home. They have gone a long way in smashing the home itself," the French lady goes on. "Their vaunted emancipation," she says, "has to do with such outward and superficial manifestations as co-education in the colleges, the right to vote and a certain equality with men in professions and trades. Inwardly the American woman has not advanced a single step. She merely apes man. She is the unhappiest and most unnatural creature in the world. Instead of idealizing her own sphere, the home, the American woman has sought to escape the home by going into business and the professions."

The French observer says that these phenomena which she reports are the more to be wept over since American women are by nature of kind and lovely disposition. Only these womanly qualities are taboo among the modern New York and Chicago sets, she maintains. Women in those cities affect to be hard-boiled, tough and mannish. "Just listen for one hour to the voices of an average crowd of American women," she says, "and you will be convinced. Hard, metallic voices, without the slightest intonation of womanly charm and kindness. The difference between Ameri-

Marguerite Mooers Marshall Is Sure the Gallic Writer Could Not Have Seen the Inside of an American Home

By Marguerite Mooers Marshall (The Woman of It)

AN AMERICAN woman's first reaction to the acidulous attack launched upon us all by Madame Sylvia Mercier is frank compassion. What an unhappy and lonely time it of Madame Mercier must have had, during her "few trips" to this country! Did she bring no letters of introduction? Was she so ill that she could not leave her hotel? Whatever the cause, it is instantly obvious that our feminine French critic didn't get around much. She seems never to have got inside the homes which American women, by the hundred thousand, are making perhaps healthier, happier, more attractive and more efficient than homes ever have been made before.

No woman, no fair-minded man, familiar with American home life can refrain from smiling at the preposterous charge that the American woman of today is "the destroyer of the family." But even a foreigner who may not, for some reason, have been entertained with the American woman's customary hospitality—even such a foreigner need look no farther than this page, or similar pages in other newspapers and magazines, to realize how intelligent and how widespread is the home-making passion in this country.

Why, else, pray, do editors print columns for home-makers—columns of advice and discussion on how to feed the family, how to bring up the children, how to decorate the home, how to adjust its relationship with fairness and tenderness and humor? All over the United States innumerable women read such columns; think, plan, work to utilize their presentation of the latest discoveries of science and invention and art for the enrichment of home life. To judge by the comments of American doughboys, quartered abroad during the war, American homes, far from being "smashed," suit American menfolk rather better than homes made in France.

American men, however, if we may believe Madame Mercier, are at fault in the way they treat their women. This criticism has come so often from feminine foreign visitors that an American woman may be pardoned for suspecting it to be based on envy. Our men do treat women differently from the way in which French women are treated—to judge by the recent candid confessions of Henri Marchand, in the Buffalo witchcraft murder trial. He had so many girls, he recalled smugly, and his wife knew all front of the necklace, like a jeweled stud. The necklace pictured is a modified version of the four-in-hand tie. It is made of hundreds of stones of rock crystal, cut flat like baguette diamonds. In place of the large knot at the front, the necklace is caught together with a clasp covered by an immense square-cut emerald. Many of the diamond necklaces seen in Paris these days at smart tea openings, follow this cravat line. They are especially in favor because they follow the new vogue for wearing jewels flat against the throat and shoulders like a ribbon.

Necklaces Like Men's Ties

AT LEAST one masculine influence remains among the hundreds of new feminine Parisian styles—the necklace that is made like a man's cravat. Jewel shops on the Rue de la Paix are showing chains of jewels that copy their lines directly from a man's cravat.

Some of the cravat necklaces tie around the neck, or rather seem to tie—in the manner of a man's bow. Others are variations of the four-in-hand. Some are so authentic in design as to have a pearl set in the

WE were talking to-day to a man who knows hair. Knows how to treat it and cut it and wave it, permanently or otherwise. Knows the scalp needs of its moderns and our coiffure needs as well. How we wish we could tell you his name.

But, alas! that is against all the rules. So the next best thing we can do is to quote some of the wise and helpful things he said on the subject of his life study.

"No woman who cannot afford to spend time and money rather generously should go in for extreme styles in hair. Either extreme haircuts or coiffures. To those of us who are business women, I always advise a natural, conservative bob or hairdressing."

An excellent thing to remember, busy girl, the next time you are tempted to have something radical done with your hair. The way out of the beaten-path in hair styles demands first of all the sure, sensitive touch of an artist, and secondly, the frequent attention of the artist.

And by the way, one sure sign of the artist in hairdressing is his attention to shaping, moulding the hair to suit the personality, rather than the ability to echo the fashion or merely to follow a straight line when cutting hair.

Really intelligent coiffeurs are sculptors, in a sense, and not cutters of ready-to-wear garments. By the absence of the mechanical in their work shall you know them.

Something else we learned to-day, a piece of good news for the girl who suffers from an oily scalp and straight hair. Frequent shampooing necessitates frequent waving, neither of which is advisable for oily heads—or in fact any other sort.

Certain of the more imaginative hair specialists have devised a means of cleaning the oily hair without washing it—yes, without the usual powder dry shampoo too—and without—oh, heaven be praised for this invention—disturbing the precious and expensive wave. It is really a form of dry cleaning for the hair.

Oh, Go to Bed

"DAD, when did I kiss the Blarney Stone?"

"Kiss the Blarney Stone! You never kissed the Blarney Stone!"

"Bridget said I did."

"What did you say to Bridget just before she told you that?"

"I only told her how good her pies were!"

"Well, Son, I guess you must have kissed the Blarney Stone, if you told her that."

"When did I kiss the Blarney Stone?"

"Oh, go to bed."

The Farmer's Advice

THAT terrible burden you are carrying will not fit another. No burden of another will fit your back and neither will your crown fit another, in case you are wearing one.

Furthermore, your burden will lighten and disappear WHEN YOU LET IT.

There is a tendency now to let down, to take things easy and blame laziness on hard times. It is far better to keep busy and forget your burden and for goodness sake, KEEP STILL.

POISON HINTED IN JULIAN PROBE

LOS ANGELES, April 17. —(UP)—A possibility that Robert William Bursian went to his death in an automobile crash because he was about to testify in the grand jury investigation of the Julian Petroleum crash was opened today.

The county chemist's office announced that a drug frequently in use in the underworld as "knock-out drops" was found in his vital organs. The drug is not a deadly poison, but can produce unconsciousness.

Bursian, an under cover agent for the district attorney's office, died when his car plunged over a 300 foot bank Tuesday. He was to have testified the next morning.

While Bursian's death was being investigated, the appellate court ruled that Jacob Berman, former Julian Petroleum executive, must go to trial on a 1928 indictment charging bribery. The decision was regarded as a victory for Superior Judge Marshall McComb, who put the indictment in force after he had been removed as judge in a bribery case in which Berman is a defendant.

Berman charged prejudice. At the same time the District Attorney's office had the trial of S. C. Lewis, former Julian president, set for April 25. Lewis is in federal prison on a conviction in another case. He went to prison to avoid a state jury bribery trial.

Unemployed Vets Needed For Work

George Sanderson, service officer of the Allied Veterans Council, yesterday issued an appeal for veterans who wished to work.

Calls for various jobs were filled and still the calls came in. Sanderson was faced with the dilemma of having more jobs than he could fill with out-of-work service men. To alleviate these unfortunate conditions, Sanderson has requested that all ex-service men, whether allied or not, who are in need of work, communicate with him at his home, 300 Bissell avenue, or telephone Rich. 416-J.

Sanderson believes he can place a number of men at work that will last over a period of weeks if not longer, with the early crop season at hand and building operations picking up.

AL DENIES BIG RACKETEER MERGER

After the murder, Burke disappeared despite a nation wide man hunt.

Blue's murder also brought in reports that "Scarface" Al Capone at an underworld banquet in his Cicero stronghold last night had signed a peace pact with his enemies to "lay off the rough stuff."

The reports later were denied by Capone underlings who said there was a banquet but that Al Capone had held it merely to eat and drink and be merry, and not to attend to any business.

The Chicago Daily News in its late editions, meanwhile, charged Capone, perhaps Chicago's most notorious beer and vice lord, with entering into one of the most amazing graft programs ever to confront the city hall—that of controlling all the plumbers in the city.

The News charged that business agents of several plumbers' unions had hired Capone and his gunmen to force passage of an ordinance to establish a municipal plumbing bureau, through which thousands of workers could be controlled, exploited, and made to pay for the privilege of doing business.

"It would mean a pineapple or a machine gun bullet for me if I would reveal my name in trying to stop this graft," the News reported one alderman as saying. The paper went on to say that the projected plumbing bureau is only another step in the racketeer's campaign to gain control of the whole Chicago labor supply.

COREYS DEFEAT MCRACKEN NINE

The most hectic struggle of yesterday's American Legion Junior baseball league card was fought between the Corey Garage and McRackens nines on the El Cerrito diamond. The Coreys finally came out on top with a score of 2 to 1.

Neither squad could gain an advantage until the fifth inning, when the Garagemen rallied to collect two runs. The Clothiers gained the lead in the sixth inning. Reno Passone occupied the box for the Coreys, allowing four hits fanning 15. McRackens swatted, and walking two. Novascone, received for the winners, Ghella twirled for the McRackens squad allowing five hits, fanning 13. Coreys, and walking six. One three base hit was made by Cerutti, Corey left fielder.

Sons Win

The Native Sons squad, one of the foremost contenders for local American Legion baseball honors, yesterday completely swamped the Grant athletes with a score of 17 to 1. The El Cerrito athletes, also of the National league, defeated the Baby Oaks 10 to 6.

In other American Legion contests played yesterday, the White Sox of the American league division defeated the Lucky Strikes 12 to 3, while the Harding nines handed a 16 to 15 defeat to the Grant athletes. The Martins won by default over the O'Malleys. The Baby Yankees also won by default from the Red Sox.

In the American association, the Bobcats lost to the Rattlesnakes 15 to 4 and the El Cerrito Bears defeated the Baby Oaks 10 to 6.

Juniors Win

In the Pacific Coast league division, the San Pablo Juniors defeated the Wildcats 16 to 1, while the Fairmont Oaks won over the First Baggers by default. The Smith Juniors also won by default from the Lucky Strikes.

Oaks Defeat Seattle In Third Game

SAN FRANCISCO, April 17. (UP)—Portland's Beavers have made only four hits in two days and their opponents in the current series, the Sacramento Senators, were only one game behind the league leading Los Angeles Angels tonight.

The San Francisco Seals and Oakland also closed in on the Angels with victories today.

A 5 to 2 lead the Angels had secured at the end of the fourth inning dwindled fast when Hollywood rallied to tie the score in the sixth. Then the Seals scored twice in the eighth to win, 7 to 5.

Sacramento defeated Portland, 2 to 0, turning four hits into two runs while Keating, Senator pitcher, was holding the Beavers to two hits.

Elmer Jacobs, Seal hurler, also turned in a shut-out performance, allowing only four hits, and the Seals defeated the San Francisco Missions, 9 to 0.

Oakland triumphed over Seattle, 11 to 10, after a see-saw encounter. Seattle was in the lead three times but three runs by Oakland in the last of the eighth were decisive.

WHITE SOX WIN IN EXTRA INNING

Metzler's tenth inning double, batting in Cissell, gave the Chicago White Sox an 8 to 7 victory over the Cleveland Indians in the first overtime game of the 1930 season. Cool weather held attendance at the twice postponed season's opener to 15,000 the smallest Chicago opening day crowd of recent years.

Hudlin shut out the Sox for the first five innings but a six run rally in the sixth gave the Chicagoans a lead. Cleveland tied the count in the ninth but lost out in the next session.

Earl Whitehill pitched the Detroit Tigers to their second consecutive victory of the season, beating St. Louis, 6 to 1, in a contest which was halted in the sixth by rain, hail and darkness. Whitehill allowed only three hits. The Tigers bunched four singles for a pair of runs in the first and added runs on homers by McManus and Alexander in the fourth and fifth innings respectively.

Other American league games were postponed, rain stopping the Yanks and Athletics and cold weather preventing the Washington-Boston contest.

Larry French, Pittsburgh southpaw, allowed the Cincinnati Reds only two hits today as the Pirates took the deciding game of the series, 7 to 1. Meusel's single in the seventh and Allen's homer in the ninth were the only Cincinnati safeties. The Pirates clinched the game in the third when they combined five hits, a sacrifice, two stolen bases and a walk for four runs.

Pat Malone held the St. Louis Cardinals to three hits in seven innings today and the Chicago Cubs minus the services of Rogers Hornsby and Charley Grimm, won the abbreviated contest, 3 to 0. The Cards had two men on and two out when rain halted the game in the seventh. Stephenson's homer featured the Cubs attack.

Burke Council Nine To Meet Odd Fellows

Considerable interest was manifested at a meeting of Burke council, Y. M. C. A. in Memorial hall last night, over the baseball game this Sunday between the Burke nine and the Odd Fellow squad.

The game will be played at the San Pablo park and will start at 2:30. Despite having lost the first game of the year last week to Concord, Burke council is optimistic over the outcome of the game Sunday.

John Medo, the Y. M. C. A.'s star pitcher, is slated to take the mound for the institute team.

SYNOPSIS

Flight. The flight of Stella Blackney, who had befriended him, David Wade takes her away from New Guinea to the island of Motogaru—away from O'Shane, her husband in name, who seeks to claim his rights on her mother's death. But on Motogaru, Stella finds new fears, due to the seductive attractions of Moira, a half-caste girl, whom they take to live with them upon her father's death. Unable to marry Wade, whom she loves, Stella fears the girl will win him away from her. Their trade with the natives prospers and soon they send a small ship of copra and pearls to Tena.

"He is all right," said Moira. "All right, yes!" Into her eyes had come suddenly a dreamy, distant look—the look that had come there when she heard the crew-boys dancing the Sorrow-Dance that night on the schooner's deck. "No harm can come to him." She almost chanted the words.

"This—it keeps away bad fortune," she extended her arm, showing above the elbow a circlet fashioned from a single white shell and curiously carved. "It was my mother's. My mother's." Her body swayed a little. "Had I worn it always the bad sickness could not have come to my father." Her eyes were almost closed. Something of drove all thoughts of the cutter's safety or otherwise from Stella's mind, and destroyed her tranquility as completely as though it had never been.

It was one evening, after a dinner of yams and fish and mangoes, as she sat in a dark corner of the veranda. David had gone to the village in order to obtain further supplies of native foods. The night was still. There was only the distant rumbling of the sea on the reef. Stella often sat thus in the dark, listening to that rumbling. There was in it a note of music—a hidden, elusive note. It was as though the world was humming a tune beneath its breath.

Moira came out from the living-room and went to the head of the steps, out of the lamplight which, coming through the doorway, made on the floor an irregular triangle. She struck a match and lit a cigarette. It was made from trader's baccos, for their other cigarettes were done. The odour of it drifted along the veranda, acid and rank. Stella was about to call to her, but stopped.

Lo-oru had appeared in the irregular triangle of light, and there was about her a curious appearance of stealth and hesitation, and a combination of both. Stella was conscious of a queer feeling of tension.

"My sinabada—is she here?" came Lo-oru's voice. She had stepped to Moira's shadow against the background of darkness they were a pair of amorphous shadows. "I haven't seen her. I think she has gone to the village with the master." The cigarette was a dull glow that came and went like a pulse.

"Moira!"

Lo-oru stepped closer to the half-caste. The two amorphous shadows became one. The rumbling on the reef swelled a little louder, in an organ-like tone.

"I am 'frail for her! Frail!' Lo-oru whispered.

"Why—what for?"

There was a little silence. A feeling of menace entered Stella's feeling of tension. She was holding her breath without knowing that she held it.

"She is my good friend," Lo-oru went on in the same whispering, "and you are her good friend, too. Maybe you can tell me. You have lived in white-man countries. You are half-white, and might be you understand these things."

"Tell me," said Moira.

There was another little silence. To Stella it was the longest silence of her life. A guess at what Lo-oru was about to say tore through her brain. She wanted to rise and interrupt, but found she could not.

"The mission man said that when a man and a woman they live together without they married, then they will burn up in a big fire. The words were like a breath drift, so low were they. "He said they would surely burn, and burn for a year, for many years—burn always."

She stopped, as though fearing to utter more, and after a moment went on:

"Moira, I not want my sinabada, my good sinabada, to burn like that for many years, for always. Sometimes I not sleep all night because I think of I I burn my sinabada! Ah! Love her! Moira, Moira, you are wise. You know many things. Tell me if the mission man he speake true words. Do people burn—"

"Ah!"

A glow of the cigarette brightened sharply and redly. The rumbling on the reef died to a soft murmuring, like a crowd of people whispering.

"Then they are not married?" came Moira's voice on the intake of the breath. "Is that true, Lo-oru? Is it true?"

"I think so, Moira, did the mission man speak—"

A footstep sounded on the ground below. "The master is coming back," said Moira. "Come with me to the beach and tell me all about it. Down the back steps."

She cast her glance over the rail. It went glowing through the night like a falling star.

CHAPTER XII

Moira very quickly satisfied herself that Lo-oru's information was correct. Her method of doing it was purposeful and direct. A thoroughly civilized woman might have gone about it discreetly and circumspectly, having regard for seamliness and convention. But Moira was not a thoroughly civilized woman. At heart she was a savage, and just as a savage had much of the directness of a child, so, like a child, did she go direct to the point. She asked Stella herself.

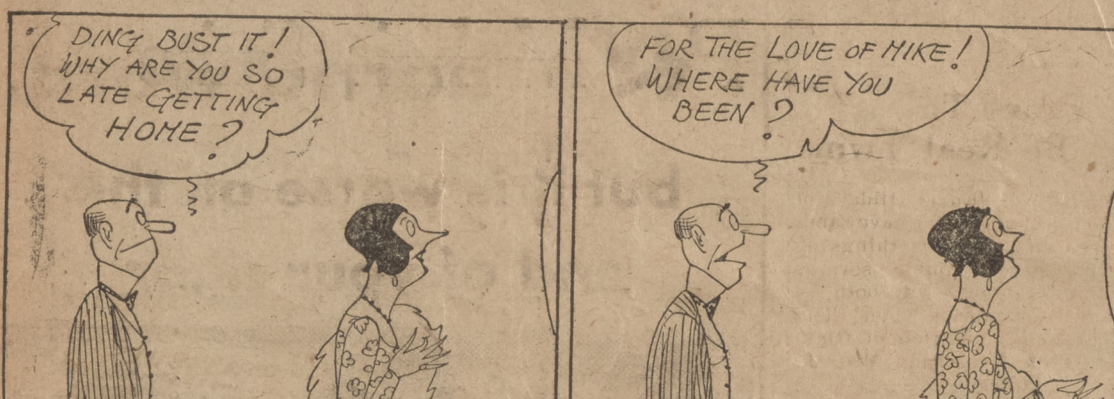

"I have heard that you two are not man and wife," was the way she put it. "Is it true?"

It was the morning after Lo-oru had come to her fearfully on the veranda. They were alone in the living-room.

ROBOT PILOTS PLANE ON RAID

Francisco, the course was again laid for Sacramento, and not until the bomber was over Mather Field did the human pilots take command and bring the craft to earth.

Although this was a preliminary test, army officials said it proved the feasibility of trusting planes to the robot in weather when visibility is so bad that human piloting is impossible. Further tests will be made during the coming week and it is hoped soon to make a cross country flight of several hundred miles.

Inventor Present
Elmer A. Sperry of New York, who is inventor of the new device, accompanied the plane on its epochal flight.

Security zones and rendezvous by use of radio was tested in the army air corps field exercises in Northern California here today.

While "blue" bombardment and attack planes flew in a mission of destruction aimed at the airbase near Willow, "red" pursuit planes suddenly attacked them. "Blue" pursuit planes were maintaining a security zone some 20 miles distant.

Reds Win Battle
The "red" outwitted the "blue" however, and pounced upon them unsuspected before they could retreat to their security zone. The army officials awarded the victory to the "reds" on the basis of the skill in approaching the "blues" unseen.

Rendezvous by use of radio was highly successful. In this maneuver the "blues" called for help by radio from their pursuit ships when the enemy "reds" were first noted near Stockton. By quick maneuvering, the "blues" eluded the "reds" until the rescuing pursuit group arrived and overwhelmed the enemy.

U.S. Given Free Hand In Naval Treaty

LONDON, April 17. —(UP)—The United States will retain a free hand to increase its fleet in an emergency without consulting Japan and Great Britain, Senator Robinson declared today in explaining the so called "safeguarding" clause agreed to by the three delegations at the naval conference.

The clause, which still lacks the formal approval by Tokyo and the preamble are the only parts still unincorporated in the naval treaty to be signed next Tuesday.

Robinson's statement was the first quotable explanation of the safeguarding rule, which is designed to protect the three signatories of the limitations agreement against possible aggressive building by France and Italy.

The Arkansas senator and naval delegate indicated that American fear of foreign entanglements and the British admiralty's demand for an unhampered building program in case of foreign menace are both satisfactorily disposed of in this clause.

The first rough draft of the naval treaty was distributed among the U. S. delegates this morning.
